Technisource Consultant Leads Development of Award-Winning Employee Portal

Microsoft recognizes Jacksonville, Fla., site as national standard

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. - (March 29, 2007) - Calling it the best employee portal example in the United States, Microsoft recognized the City of Jacksonville for its effective development of new site using Microsoft Office SharePoint 2003. Consultant Nitin Deshmukh of Technisource, a national information technology and engineering services provider, led the city's team in the installation and networking processes.

"Nitin Deshmukh was integral to the success of the team who developed the City of Jacksonville's employee portal," said Michael Winwood, president of Technisource. "Through his leadership, the city was able to complete the installation quickly. Technisource is proud to have assisted with the city's highly efficient gateway operations system. We join Microsoft in recognizing the City of Jacksonville and are pleased to have been a part of this important project."

The new portal serves as a centralized point for city employees to find and manage internal and external information. In addition, the portal has collaboration features to encourage cooperation on projects and programs.

Mayor John Peyton and members of the portal team, including Deshmukh, were recognized by Microsoft on March 29.
